How Prometheus Gave Fire to the People

- 1 Long ago, in ancient Greece, there lived a demi-god named Prometheus. He lived amongst the clouds on Mount Olympus. While the gods were spending their time in idleness, drinking nectar and eating ambrosia, he was planning on how to make the world wiser and better.
- 2 Prometheus went to live amongst the people. He noticed that they were not happy. He found them living in caves and holes, shivering from the cold. "If only they had fire, they could warm themselves and cook their food," said Prometheus. He went boldly to Zeus and begged him to give fire to the people so that they might have a little comfort through Winter.
- 3 "I will not!" said Zeus. If people had fire, they might become strong and wise and drive us out of our kingdom. Besides, fire is a dangerous tool and they are too poor and ignorant to be trusted with it. It is better that we, on Mount Olympus, rule the world without threat."
- 4 Prometheus didn't answer, but had set his heart on helping humankind. As he was walking by the sea-shore, he found a tall stalk of fennel. He broke it off and saw that its hollow centre was filled with a dry, soft substance, which would burn slowly and stay alight for a long time. He carried the stalk with him to the top of Mount Olympus.
- 5 "Humankind shall have fire, despite what Zeus has decided," he said. He stole a spark from Zeus' lightning bolt and set the dry substance alight. Prometheus went down and showed the people how to warm themselves and cook their food. Men and women gathered around the fire and were warm and happy. They were thankful to Prometheus for the wonderful gift.
- 6 When Zeus realised that Prometheus had disobeyed him and gave fire to the people, he was very angry. To punish Prometheus, he ordered that his soldiers chain him to the side of the mountain to suffer there for all eternity.
